Yesterday the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) hiked rates by a quarter point, setting the federal funds rate target to 0.75-1.00%¹

- One Committee member voted against the increase, and projections imply that two more hikes are expected this year

- Treasury yields sold off to start the week, then fell across the curve following the rate hike announcement¹

- The 10-year Treasury rate rose 21bps on the month through Tuesday, then plunged 10bps on Wednesday to 2.49%¹

- Producer and consumer price index inflation reports came in as expected, with prices rising around 0.1% month-over-month, suggesting stronger inflation near the Fed’s 2% target¹

- Investment-grade issuance slowed mid-week as a winter storm in the northeastern US coupled with the FOMC rate decision pushed most deals to the sidelines on Tuesday and Wednesday²

- Issuers priced about $30 billion for a month-to-date total of $90 billion, which is almost 20% ahead of last year’s pace²

- Lower oil prices weighed on investment-grade corporate spreads, which leaked 4bps wider, closing at 118bps¹

- The FOMC offered few details on the Committee’s plan for shrinking the Fed’s balance sheet and indicated that proceeds from agency mortgage-backed securities (MBS) holdings will continue to be reinvested, which should support market technicals¹

- The sector outperformed corporates month-to-date, but weakened relative to Treasuries

- Municipal bonds struggled to keep up with the Treasury rally yesterday, and the 5-year municipal/Treasury ratio rose 5% to 85%¹

Sources: 1. Bloomberg Barclays  2. Citigroup

⁴Excess returns are the curve-adjusted excess return of a given index relative to a term structure-matched position in Treasuries.

The views contained in this report are those of IR+M and are based on information obtained by IR+M from sources that are believed to be reliable. This report is for informational purposes only and is not intended to provide specific advice, recommendations, or projected returns for any particular IR+M product. No part of this material may be reproduced in any form, or referred to in any other publication, without express written permission from Income Research & Management.